This is the final 2008 USTSA race season points calculation. There are two changes from prior year or preliminary 2008 points calculations to be aware of:
 Women's points have been "zero'd out" so that the leading women racer has 0 points. In the past, we zero'd out the men and used that same factor for the women. In 2007, the top racer was reported with 46.3 on the GS points list. For 2008, the top women's racer will have 0 points. As the points system only reflects the relative performance of racers, this change will have no impact on team selection or racer ranking. Women's World Cup Classic race results have been excluded from the USTSA points calculation because the women did not run the same course as the men during these races. For all races, women's points are calculated based on the men's results because we do not have enough women at most races to have a meaningful points calculation. One of the key factors in the race points calculation is each racer's time difference from the winner racer. As long as every racer runs the same course, the relative differences are meaningful. If there is a shorter course for women in some races and the same course in others, the points for the races where the women run a shorter course will be artificially lower. Accordingly, the USTSA Board of Directors determined that the Women's World Cup Classic race points will be published but will be excluded from the final USTSA Points Calculation.
